Dear Cord:

STAT

I have just had word that the job you discussed with [redacted] will, after all, not be available. I am sorry about this and so is [redacted], who had become in the course of the talks you had with him very anxious to land you.

• Other possibilities may develop in [redacted] organization as well as others, and when mid-July comes and you have your decision to make about the other job, I think it might be worthwhile for you to get in touch with us once more.

Sincerely,

Allen W. Dulles

Dear Alan:

I enclose a copy of my letter to [redacted]. I was very much interested in the job that he had in mind and we discussed it in a little more detail. As I have written [redacted] there is just a chance that something else that I would like to be free to consider may come through in early July, and so what I would really like to do, if this arrangement is satisfactory with you and [redacted] is to accept on the understanding that I would be free to consider this other thing. Of course, I am prepared to give you a definite commitment within the month if you have to have one but I would much appreciate delaying a final decision until the middle of July. Please let me know what you think of this; I must add my personal thanks for the ~~interesting~~ advice you have gone out of your way to give me.

My dear Mr. Dulles:

Many thanks for giving me the time you did on Tuesday. I am much interested in the possibilities of working for Central Intelligence and had a satisfactory talk with [Redacted] [Redacted] to whom you referred me. I shall make out the papers required for the loyalty check, but, as I told you, I can't make a definite decision at the moment. There are a number of other possibilities I think I ought to explore, but I shall let you know as soon as I can, which should be within the next month.

Many thanks again for your encouragement, and I wish you all success in the very difficult and important job you have undertaken. I do hope that things finally turn out that I may be able to come with you.

Sincerely yours,

[Redacted]
Cord Meyer, Jr.
